

tester ▾

Senior Member Reputation Points: 2000

REFORMED

Join Date: Jan 2011
Posts: 10,337Originally Posted by BobfromNebraska ▾The Catholic Church teaches that Scripture and Tradition must be accepted and honored with equal sentiments of devotion and reverence.If one subscribes to the belief that the Bible is the sole or ultimate authority on matters of faith, that person should be able to point to a Bible verse or a number of verses that explicitly tell us this is true.If you cannot point to an explicit verse or verses, you are necessarily violating your own belief because you are adding your own personal interpretation to Scripture in order to come up with your belief in Sola Scriptura and that make Sola Scriptura a Tradition, which defeats it's own premise.So let's see if anyone can provide a verse that says Scripture is the sole or ultimate authority on matters of faith.

your premise is wrong:

Imagine the the only written word we had from God were the 10 Commandments
Is it a requirement for the Ten Commandants to say they are the ultimate authority to be true?
of course not

Sola Scriptura is true because of what Scripture is; not because of what Scripture says.